

Barks, Purrs, Tweets, Neighs... Pets Speak Love in Many Ways

Abby Schiefelbein

There are many different kinds of animals all over the world. Just like humans, each one was put on this Earth for a reason. The animals we get to interact with every day were put there as a gift from God. They are a constant reminder of God's love for us. Without animals, especially our own pets, I believe this world would be a lot less loving and peaceful. Animals are a constant reminder that there's someone out there who loves us for who we are no matter what our flaws are. With animals, love isn't just about finding a mate and calling it love. Love for them is innocent and true. They do not always expect the love in return. They are there to try to make you happy without even knowing it. Animals love is pure and not based off of thought or feelings being placed in their heads. It is a true love that we cannot fully appreciate because we do not get to experience it every day.

There is a different animal for every person. Whether it be a cat, bird, dog, or even a cow, there is an animal that someone loves the most. They will turn to this animal when needing someone who won't judge them for their flaws and won't talk back but just listen. My favorite animal out of all of them is the dog. Why? A dog is anyone's best friend. They are true companions for life. I feel a constant love with them anytime I am around one because they are always in search of your love. When anyone is around them it is easy to be filled with joy and to have all your worries melt away. An animal can read human emotion better than any other human can. They know when something is wrong or when you are in a good mood. No matter what it is they are there by your side wanting to show your love and let you know they are there with you. This is where I know I can see and find love even when it has been an awful day.

Animals do not live as long as humans do, and many complain about this as to asking why they leave us so soon when they bring us complete happiness. The answer is very simple; we as humans are put on this Earth to learn how to live a good life and love everyone all at once. For animals, when they are put on this Earth by God they already know how to do this, so they do not need to stay as long. I heard this from someone after I had just lost my first dog and it made me realize how true this is. Animals are the only ones on this planet who are able to love someone with their whole heart and not have to know who the person is. When I see an animal the first thing I think of is love and how they are an image of God's love for us. Yes, animals speak love in many ways, but they are all here to use that gift the same way, to show us that love unconditionally that we are not capable of.
